Take Optimistic View.

Every utterance of Carranza since it became known that the United States and Latin-America had determined to try became known that the United States and Latin-American had determined to try to effect peace in Maxico has been of a belificose character. Yet those who take an optimistic view of the situation are hopeful that when the first chief has had time to reflect on the contents of the pan-American note he will prefer to take his chances in a convention rather than risk all by opposing the moral force represented by the United States and the Latin-American republics. It is pointed to try to take the provisional government. Minister Lombardo expresses that in the good intentions of President Wilson toward Mexico, and states that Latin-American republics. It is pointed out that Carranza controls a much wider extent of territory than his opponents. and that as all the governors of states and territories will be represented in the peace convention, Carranza would stand more than an even chance of dominating the convention.

The impression is growing in Washington that perhaps this country's real troubles with Mexico are about to begin, and that the pan-American plan, instead of resulting in early pacification, will force the United States sooner than was expected by even the most pessimistic to dispatch an army to Mexico City. De-spite this, State Department officials are hoping for the best and refuse to be

There is no longer any doubt that Latin-America will stand by the United States in its dealings with Mexico just as long as partification is sought without the use of arms. If at any time it be-comes apparent that the United States has decided to intervene, or contemplates armed intervention, the pan-American conference, organized to bring about peace in Mexico, will be dissolved. This is well understood by all parties to
